

Angelgrams:

Angles on Angels

For many years I have arisen early, at that 4:00 a.m. time of deep inspiration, to write to and from my angelic team. I write a question or comment to them and breathe deeply and wait. They write a response through me on my keyboard. In this way I communicate my confusions and proclamations, creation requests and cries for help, and receive their wisdom.

So often when I re-read what has been written, it seems completely unremarkable to me. But when I walk away from the text for hours or weeks and re-read it, the wisdom is clear, sometimes profound. I asked about this and was shown that when I sit and write this way originally, I am in a cylinder or beam of energy connecting me with my angels, and so nothing seems unremarkable, as it is all one. When I return to ordinary consciousness and later read what has come through, it is obvious that the responses are from a higher realm.

I call these messages back and forth, *Angelgrams*TM. So very often as my fingers fly, half asleep, I found myself typing "angles" rather than "angels." This happened so often I asked if the different spelling held intentional meaning and was told that actually the different angels each represent, contain, or hold a unique "angle" of God's light, love, and sound. So, indeed although the proper word was "angels", "angles" was equally true and newly revelatory. This taught me to resist editing their offerings into "correct" English, to see and feel more deeply into precisely what was given. To trust that they know what they are saying, and I know how to receive them.

So I continue to arise, and type, and walk away. And return to see the powerful wisdom flow between us. Feeling my gratitude for this connection, I am also aware of their appreciation for my maintaining a rhythm of relationship, for opening the door to them. They tell me the handle is on my side.